Join a Psychology Study

University of Lincoln researchers are seeking participants aged 16-18 for a study investigating the reasons for gender differences in Psychology degree uptake. The study aims to inform support for getting underrepresented groups to study Psychology.

Participants don't need to be studying Psychology, and will simply need to complete a short survey about the kind of subjects they are currently studying or would like to study, at A Level or at degree level, and their thoughts about other subjects they may be less interested in.
